NORTH AMERICAN TROPHY

The North American Trophy is a bronze statuette by Herman Atkins MacNeil (1866-1947), a well-known sculpture in his time. The bronze is apparently a study for one of the figures in MacNeil's large sculpture, "The Coming of the White Man," completed in 1905 for the Portland, OR, city park. The trophy was first presented to the Association of American International Riflemen by its president, Brigadier General Bird W. Spencer, for annual competition. The trophy, then known as the North America Trophy, was offered for team competition to all the nations of the world using their respective military rifles.

As fired at Sea Girt in 1919, the course of fire for the eight member teams included 15 shots prone at the 200, 600, 900 and 1200 yard distances. Custody of the trophy was transferred to the NRA sometime in the 1920's, and now is awarded annually in the NRA National High Power Championships.
